So, while you can put the original, the original document, into a fireproof box, and put it in storage, knowing that it is there for insurance purposes. You can't print it out. I suspect you could track it down. I don't have any direct experience in that. In all my years in information security, I think I've only come across a couple of cases where it wasn't possible to find out. The best that you can do is to have robust protections to make sure that it isn't obtainable by someone else. And if it is, to ensure that you've made it very difficult for them. That's all you can do. I have been trying to figure out what the average was for that. Not because I actually care very much, but because it's an interesting kind of an information security question. It's one that gets asked over and over again, and you get asked to talk about it at every security conference and so on. So I thought it would be interesting to see how often it does come up. The answer is "not often." So maybe it's not that difficult to figure out, but once you've lost it, you need to be ready for the bad news: "We can't find it." Thank you for this interview. It was fantastic. I'll link it on to the podcast. Thank you. Join 600,000+ Insiders SIGN UP FOR THE ALLERGAN GADGET ALERT edd6d56e20
